Although the Democratic papers of New York say John Kelly is dead, he is still able to give the Democrats more trouble than they are able to bear. John is hard to kill and much harder to harmonize.

The Republican harmony in New York has almost paralyzed the Democrats of that State. The latter expected a fight and a break in the Republican convention, and because they did not come they are in a sorrowful mood.

It gives the Democrats a little hope to think the Methodist conference endorsed prohibition, and therefore did something to help the Democratic ticket. But the members of the Methodist church in Wisconsin will not follow the conference. The more thoughtful ones, those who believe in practical temperance reform, will decide not to desert the Republican party that the Democratic party may be strengthened.

Roscoe Conkling went to Washington on Saturday. But this is not the worst of it. He went to Jones's mansion and was closeted three hours with President Arthur. This has given some of the newspapers the jim-jams. Of course, nothing is known of the nature of the conference, but that makes no difference. The idea that Conkling presumed to go to Washington at all, and especially to look himself up with the President for three whole hours, makes some almost faint, and creates a good deal of restiveness on the part of certain Republicans. As strange and awful as Conkling's visit to the President is, the government still lives, and there are some who are surprised at this fact.

The Hon. Edwin E. Woodman, has sold his interest in the Baraboo Republic to his partner, John H. Powers, and will hereafter devote his time to his profession, that of civil engineering. Mr. Woodman is well known in Janesville, and throughout Rock county. He was formerly superintendent of schools in Janesville, and as an educator took a high rank. During the past two years he has been a member of the State Senate, and in all that body there was not a more faithful representative of the people's interests than Mr. Woodman. He is an accomplished civil engineer and will make his mark in the profession to which he is thoroughly devoted.

To show how kindly is the disposition and sweet the spirit of Dr. W. H. Thomas, who is being presented for righteousness sake, we give the closing paragraph of his address to the counsel of fifteen at Sycamore, before whom he will be tried. He says:

Should you find me guilty, I shall sorrowfully confess that I have all my life been mistaken as to the breadth of and elasticity of Methodism. Should you find me not guilty, I shall do what good I can elsewhere, and try to find more peaceful employ than in fighting the church I have so long loved and served. We shall all soon be doing with our work on earth. One who was to appear against me has gone hence; I shall try to meet him and you somewhere on the other shore; and then and there, if not now and here, I trust we shall dwell in the clearer light and life of truth and love.

There is some difference between this Christ-like spirit of Dr. Thomas, and the hateful and revengeful spirit of Rev. Dr. Hatfield, a brother pastor, who said that Dr. Thomas ought to be kicked out of the church with a square-toed boot.

THE PROHIBITIONISTS AND THE REPUBLICAN PARTY.

A Prohibition State ticket can never be elected in Wisconsin or in any State in the Union. The Prohibitionists can never elect a majority of the members of the Legislature. They will never be strong enough to accomplish either one of these things. What then can the Prohibitionists hope to secure by running separate tickets? What they want is a submission of the prohibition question to the people. How can they get it? It can never be done by nominating State tickets. It can never be done by nominating separate Senate or Assembly tickets. It is possible that it can never be done under any circumstances, but what is the likeliest way to move in the matter? That is a question which addresses itself to every sober-minded man whether he be a Prohibitionist or a Republican.

The temperance question is one which has already a strong hold on the public mind. The temperance people, and by those we mean all the orders engaged in spreading the gospel of temperance and in reclaiming drunkards and building them up in sobriety, are not all Prohibitionists in the general meaning of that term. Some of them want prohibition or nothing. Others want the matter delayed for a time and the present laws pertaining to temperance strictly enforced. There are others who believe in making the temperance work personal work—in going among the men who need a helping hand like Gough and Father Matthews used to do, and like Francis Murphy is now doing—and inducing them to sign the pledge. Of course, all temperance people would like to have prohibition if it could be secured, but there are very many earnest temperance reformers who do not believe that the best way to strike for it is to run a separate ticket. It is true that such a ticket can't help the temperance work. Under no circumstances whatever can a temperance State ticket prove of any advantage to the temperance cause. It may draw a few votes from the Republican party, and thereby tend to make the Democratic party stronger, and the stronger the Democratic party becomes, the further off is the day of temperance salvation. For this reason there are a great many very earnest and enthusiastic temperance workers, members of the Republican party, who have borne the brunt of many a great battle for the cause of freedom, justice, and progress, who will not desert the party in this campaign. The Republican party holds the great moral element in this country. It has done more for education, for Christianity, for the advancement of civilization than all other political parties ever organized, and the more thoughtful and earnest of the temperance advocates will not abandon it at an hour when it needs their support.

THE SENATE.

Special to the Gazette.
WASHINGTON, October 10.—The Senate was called to order at a quarter to twelve. After prayer, Pendleton moved that Bayard, of Maryland, be President pro tem., to which Edmunds objected until the credentials of the new Senators were presented. He also moved that the credentials be accepted and the Senators sworn in. He made an address in favor of the seating of the new Senators before organizing. Every State should have full voice in the selection of a President of the Senate. Garland replied that his side was not responsible for the existing condition of things, and the Democrats had abundant precedent for maintaining the advantage. Edmunds' motion was lost, 33 to 81.
Gaitenau will be arraigned to-morrow.

SENATE ORGANIZATION.

Some Sharp Political Practice Anticipated.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 9.—The conference yesterday between the Democratic and Republican committee failed. The Democrats in caucus decided to elect a President pro tempore of the Senate, and to-morrow a resolution will be introduced naming Mr. Bayard for the successor to Chester A. Arthur.

The Republican and Democratic Senators will each meet in caucus to-morrow at 10 o'clock. Two hours later they will convene in extra session and proceed to the election of a President pro tempore. The Democratic Senators have been in consultation all day. Senator Bayard's room at Wormley's have been crowded with people, and the caucus decision of yesterday has been discussed in all its bearings.

There has been considerable agitation to-day over a hint let fall by Mr. Edmunds yesterday for mischievous purposes, that possibly General Arthur might call the Senate to order, and swear in the new Senators before formally abdicating his position. The Democrats have been claiming through their newspapers, and in other ways, that General Arthur was not President, but simply Vice President acting as President until after the election of 1881 should be held. This argument was based on Section 1, Article II of the Constitution, which says:

"In case of the removal of the President from office, or of his death, resignation, or inability to discharge the powers and duties of the said office, the same shall devolve upon the Vice President."

officers also a President pro tempore in the absence of the Vice President, or when he shall exercise the office of President of the United States."

The Democrats are undoubtedly worried as to what effect upon the future of the party their action of yesterday will have. They know that they are in possession of an accidental majority. They believe they have a perfect right to elect a President pro tempore to succeed Mr. Arthur, but they are loathly impressed with the feeling that possibly they have made a mistake in deciding to take advantage of their temporary strength.

EX-SENATOR CONKLING.

He Explains His Visit to the President.

WASHINGTON, D. C., October 9.—Ex-Senator Conkling arrived here yesterday morning at 6 o'clock from New York, accompanied by Senator Jones, of Nevada. Mr. Conkling went to Wormley's, while Senator Jones repaired to his residence, on Capitol Hill, now occupied by President Arthur. Mr. Conkling passed over two hours with the President yesterday.

WASHINGTON, D. C., October 9.—A news gatherer called upon Mr. Conkling last night after his visit to the President, with the intention of interviewing him upon the subject. Before the reporter could open his mouth Mr. Conkling took him by the hand and said: "I suppose you want to ask me how I come to be in Washington. I came to see the President. He and I have long been friends. I have not seen him since he became President until to-day. We had a conversation upon various subjects. I do not know when I shall see him again. I had thought I could call on him with as much safety as another of his friends, but it seems that the gentlemen of the press are excited over it. I assure you that you have no reason to be, and I wish you a very good evening."

THE IOWA SENATORSHIP.

Des Moines, Iowa, Oct. 9.—It has been quite common of late for Iowa correspondents to lay much stress on the probability of Mr. Kirkwood, in case he resigns his portfolio, becoming a candidate for the United States Senatorship again in this State. Such speculations have no foundation whatever. Your correspondent has the best of authority for saying that under no circumstances whatever will Mr. Kirkwood be a candidate against Mr. Wilson. The two gentlemen are sworn friends, and no one has given Mr. Wilson more cordial or earnest support in the late Senatorial contest than Mr. Kirkwood. The public may put at down as a fact, that Mr. Wilson will be the next Senator from Iowa, and with the cordial approval of Secretary Kirkwood.

MARVIN, THE BIGAMIST.

RICHMOND, Va., October 8.—The case of Marvin, the bigamist and forger, was brought to a sudden and rather unexpected termination in the Hastings, court to-day. When arraigned on the charge of forgery, and in response to the query as to his guilt or innocence, he pleaded guilty, whereupon a jury was sworn in to assess the punishment, which it fixed at five years in the penitentiary. The prisoner adopted a similar course when arraigned on the charge of bigamy, and a similar punishment was imposed, making ten years in all.

UNDER THE WHEELS.

MILWAUKEE, Oct. 8.—Herbert Wirsching, a young man residing in Oakfield, a few miles from the city, was run over by the cars and instantly killed. John Redmond, a colored man, was run over and killed on the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Road at Brookfield Junction to-day.

SENT TO JAIL.

MILWAUKEE, Wis., Oct. 8.—Fannie Smith Crocker, who attempted to blackmail Mrs. Crosby a few months ago by demanding $50,000 to keep from exposing an alleged scandal, was arraigned to-day, and held to answer. In default of bail she was jailed.

AN IOWA LETTER.

Mitchell, Dakota, Oct. 5, 1881.—Having determined on a little trip out West, I thought a few facts and opinions in reference to the country passed over and the condition, present, and prospective of the crops, might be interesting to some of your readers at least. Having traveled over roads and through portions of the country not heretofore traveled by me, I first went to St. Paul by the way of Portage City, my first stop was at the Dells on the Wisconsin river (or Killebuck City). I had been there once before in 1873, and then the only sight I got of the Dells was when I went plunging through between the rocks at the rate of fifteen miles an hour, a portion of the time the raft was entirely under water, and I was nearly frightened to death, (well I did not see much beauty then nor did I see much of any thing) but how different now as you wind your way among the rocks on a nice little pleasure steamer, with plenty of time to view every creek and groove. And the beauties are not confined to a river passage, but the whole country around Killebuck is the most interesting as far as scenery is concerned of any place I have ever visited in the Northwest, and the day is not far distant when Killebuck, City and the Dells will be among the most popular summer resorts in the West. My next stop was at St. Paul and Minneapolis, but I have given my opinion of these cities before and I am not much on cities any way, being a stranger, and will in this letter confine myself to the country. From Minneapolis I went to Big Stone lake, two hundred miles nearly west from St. Paul. This is a beautiful lake about 30 miles long, and is on the line between Minnesota and Dakota. The first 35 or 40 miles from Minneapolis you pass through a timber country with many fine, well improved farms, and looks like an old settled country.

After leaving the timber you have the same nice rolling prairie that is so universal in the west from Granite Falls west to Millbank, which is as far as the passenger trains run now, although the road is completed, and freight trains run to the James river, nearly 100 miles further west. The country looks quite new and is sparsely settled, although I was informed that nearly all of the ultimate sections of government land was already claimed either as a homestead or true claim. But a large portion of lands belonging to a railroad company, (the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul), are yet unsettled and unimproved, and some of the finest land I ever saw can now be bought of the railroad company at from $2.50 to $5.00 per acre, all along the route of that road, from Norwood to the James river; and I should think it much better for a man with small capital, or even without capital, to buy his land at prices asked with the advantages offered by the company of long term and advantage of acquiring land and society, with the advantage of homestead and nearness to railroad. With these advantages all combined I believe a man with any energy could pay for his land in five years, (the time required to get title by homestead law,) and have more around him, than he could possibly have on a homestead selected, as he must do away back on the frontier, back a long distance from the rail road. The country wherever seen along the road from Minneapolis to Big Stone lake was first rate and well matured, they raise the same kind of corn we do in Rock county, and I think equally as good, when well tended. Cuts are said to be a first rate crop, and as far west as I went where you see a claim about that is over a year old you see wheat stacks and the wheat is good and was cut into the stack in good order (the most of it) but there has been but little thrashed yet on account of the continued wet weather since harvest, and where poorly stacked must be some damaged.

I came to this place by the way of St. Paul, and then south to Mason City, Iowa. From the last named place here I came over the Iowa and Dakota division of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul R. R. I have been over a portion of this road a good many times, and have spoken of it being the best stock country in the West. I am fully confirmed in my opinion there are immense herds of cattle along the line of the road, from Mason City to the west line of the State. West of there in Dakota. The country is equally as well adapted to stock raising as Iowa, and the grass along the valleys and the bottom land along the streams, afford a better quality of grass for mowing along this road than the Missouri river is first rate where it was well tended. I saw lots of good ripe corn planted in June. There is but little timber along this line of railroad, but coal is cheap; you can get coal by the carload, (soft coal) as far west as the James river for $4.00 per ton. One load of wheat for $4.00, one load of coal. The country is settling rapidly, but there is plenty of good land yet unclaimed and unsettled, not only on this division of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul road, but on all their divisions crossing Iowa, Minnesota, and Dakota. Yours for home in a few days.

A REMINISCENCE.

What a Prominent Citizen Thinks of President Arthur.

From the Inter Ocean.
While surveying some of the decorations in the neighborhood of Prairie avenue and Sixteenth street yesterday morning, a reporter stopped before the home of Jesse Spaulding, which was most tastefully draped in emblems of mourning, and was particularly noticeable as standing out from the midst of a number of elegant residences which were quite bare of such drapery. Espying Mr. Spaulding, the reporter entered into conversation with him, the result being that the newspaper man was invited into the house, where he struck quite an interesting mine of information relative to the deceased President.

Mr. Spaulding is well known as a prominent, energetic, and hard-working Republican, always considered as a safe counselor, and appealed to in times of party emergency. It was Mr. Spaulding who came forward in the last campaign, when things looked exceedingly dubious in Indiana, and aroused such an interest among the business men of Chicago that they gave generous aid to the Republican cause and started the campaign afresh in that State. Mr. Spaulding went there personally as a member of the western committee, and the impetus given by the work begun here was followed up by the National committee, and victory was the result.

Mr. Spaulding was the intimate friend of Senator Zach Chandler, and, as is well known, was with him on that night preceding his death at the Grand Pacific hotel. As the reporter entered the parlor, he was reminded of this incident by seeing at the further end a life-size bust of the great Michigan Senator, executed by Leonard Volk of this city. The bust rested upon a stand of ebony, and is an excellent work of art. It stands against a maroon-colored back ground, and by its side rests the gold headed cane, carried by Senator Chandler in his life time, and which was presented to Mr. Spaulding, after the Senator's death, by Mrs. Chandler.

After a few minutes' talk about the deceased Senator, the conversation turned upon the present bereavement.

A REMINISCENCE.
"Were you personally acquainted with General Garfield?" asked the reporter.
"Oh, yes," said Mr. Spaulding. "Our acquaintance was of several years standing."

"Where did you last see him?"
"At his home in Ohio last January."
"Were there any incidents of the interview which you care to make public?"
"Well, my visit was of a friendly character and was very pleasant. During the interview reference was made to a little incident which occurred in this city during the national convention, and which I have thought of a thousand times since the sorrowful occurrence at Washington. Two days before General Garfield's nomination, I invited him, Senator Sawyer, of Wisconsin, and R. M. Pomeroy, President of the Atchinson branch of the Union Pacific Railway, to dine with me at the club. It was a pleasant gathering, and during it I repeated an invitation which I had given on the occasion of the celebration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the organization of the Republican party, which took place at Madison, Wis., and at which General Garfield and Senator Chandler were present, to go fishing and hunting with me on the Menominee River and vicinity. After we had finished dinner and sat back, I said jokingly, "Gentlemen, it is not at all uncertain that we have been dining with the next President of the United States."

General Garfield smiled, and placing his hand upon my shoulder, said: "I would a great deal rather take that fishing trip with you, Spaulding, than to make the campaign for President."
After we separated General Garfield mentioned the circumstance to Mr. Pomeroy, as I was afterward told, and said he came to Chicago to nominate Sherman. "Well," said Mr. Pomeroy, "that's all right; you nominate him as well as you can, but you must accept the verdict of the convention, even if that verdict should make you the nominee." As I said, I have thought of his remark at that dinner many times since, as it seemed to indicate a dread of making the race which he was finally called upon to undertake. But he made it; and there never was a campaign in which I took more interest, and worked, in my way, harder to make successful.

GENERAL ARTHUR.

"Are you acquainted with President Arthur, Mr. Spaulding?"

"Yes, I have known him in a general way for many years, and for the last few years quite intimately."

"What is your opinion of him and of his competency for the place he now takes?"

"Arthur is a thoughtful, modest, conservative man, of excellent judgment, unquestionable integrity, and possessing great executive ability. He has been at the head of as able a law firm as is to be found in the city of New York, and is certainly looked upon by the business community of that city as a safe, reliable, and competent man, and one abundantly able to fill the station to which he has been called by the mournful tragedy at Washington. I think he will grow upon the people and make a successful executive."

Mr. Spaulding goes to Cleveland to-night to attend the funeral of the late President, being one of those selected by Governor Cullum to represent the State of Illinois on that sad occasion.

THE FOREST FIRE.

From nearer, faster, higher,
Comes the waves of lurid fire,
Howling, hissing for their prey,
Can it be the Judgment Day?

When the "stars of heaven shall fall,"
And a sulphurous smoke shall fall
Hides the sun, and "like a scorching"
In God's hand, the sky shall roll.

Not but save that day of wrath,
The destroying angels' path
Never left a creature alive,
Marked with ruin, death and pain.

Where last night the homestead stood,
Ashes now, and blackened wood;
And in place of life and joy,
The scorched corpse, and anguish wild.

All, all is gone; and the bare earth,
Wasted and burned in utter dearth,
In the sad image of their fate,
Hither, and thither, and desolate!

Flash the sad news from town to town,
The nation's griefs fill and frown,
And every northern train is packed,
With aid and comfort hurrying fast.

The Savior's voice we hear once more,
Again He leaves to us His poor:
And when we hear our brother's need
It is "the Christ," we clothe and feed.

And, oh! remember well His word,
These gifts are to our risen Lord:
Let them be such that by His throne
We shall not blush our names to own.

The Habit of Mouth Breathing.

It is certainly remarkable that so little has been written on a subject so important as mouth breathing. It appears, indeed, that Dr. Cassell, of Glasgow, communicated, four years ago, an interesting paper on this topic to the Edinburgh Medical Journal, but the scope of that essay was confined to the consideration of the habit as a cause of nasal troubles. It has been discussed, also, from a general sanitary point of view by Mr. George Catlin, well known as the portrayer of Indian life and customs. But we have for the first time an exhaustive treatment of the subject by Dr. Clinton Wagner. Dr. Wagner begins by pointing out that man is by nature a nose breather, the practice of mouth breathing being acquired through carelessness, ignorance or a local trouble which renders nasal breathing difficult or impossible. The unwearied infant always breathes through its nose; unless it did the act of sucking could not be performed. From observations made by Hensell in the Freiburg clinic, it appears that in healthy infants the mouth is almost always closed during sleep, the tongue lying in contact with the hard palate, and the mouth not acting as an air passage. The relation which the nose bears to the functions of respiration is too often overlooked by persons suffering from bronchial or pulmonary disorders. It can easily be verified by experiment that the air in the passages through the tortuous channels of the nose is raised to the temperature of the body before it reaches the larynx. No matter how low the temperature may be, the sense of cold is never experienced below the border of the soft palate so long as breathing is carried on with closed mouth. Moreover, the air thus inhaled is moistened by the natural secretions which cover the turbinated tones in a condition of health, and the short, bristly hairs at the orifices of the nostrils act as a filter or sieve to arrest dust and other impurities which the air may contain, and which if drawn in by the mouth, may act as an exciting cause in developing laryngeal, bronchial, or pulmonary trouble. It is even asserted that man can inhale through his nose for a certain time without harm; whereas if he opens his mouth to answer a question or call for help, his lungs are cooled, and he expires.

The causes which lead to habitual mouth breathing are to be looked for in the nose, mouth or throat. Until recently the methods of examining the nose were so imperfect that a correct diagnosis was, in many cases, impracticable; but now, with the aid of the rhinoscope and by means of a strong reflected light thrown up through the nostrils, dilated by a proper speculum, it is possible to recognize any obstruction to the passage of air. Some instances of congenital, imperforate nostrils are reported, and the like occlusion may be caused by a cicatricial contraction from scalds or burns. Foreign bodies, too, such as buttons, seeds or stones, may lodge in the inferior meatus, where they passagely obstruct concerned in breathing and thus produce complete or partial closure. A general thickening or hypertrophy of the mucous membrane, covering the turbinated bones, such as is found in chronic nasal catarrh, would, in some cases, completely shut up one or both passages. Indeed, a slight congestion from an ordinary cold may so nearly close the air channels that breathing through the nose becomes for the time very difficult. The mouth is therefore resorted to, and thus the pernicious habit may be unconsciously acquired. Among the mouth causes which interfere with proper nasal respiration the most common are enlarged tonsils. The glands press the velum upward and backward against the posterior wall of the pharynx, and prevent the passing of air from the nose to the larynx. Irregular, unclean or spreading teeth, by obstructing perfect closure of the mouth, may also give rise to the practice of mouth breathing.

Dr. Wagner tells us that habitual mouth breathers can be at once recognized, as the practice stamps itself indelibly on the physiognomy. The retracted lips, open mouth, receding gums, protruding teeth, diminished wrinkles of the outer angles of the eyes, and the lines extending from the wings of the nose to the angles of the mouth, gives the persons addicted to this habit a silly, and, sometimes, idiotic expression. The nasal ducts, being vacated, like disused roads that grow up to grass and weeds, become the seat of polypus and other diseases; the sense of smell is greatly weakened or altogether lost; the contour of the nose is changed, and the appearance is undeveloped or atrophic appearance. The sense of hearing may be affected, the injury ranging from slight impairment to total deafness through habitual mouth breathing. According to Cassell the air must pass through the nose, otherwise it can not reach the tympanic cavity. Dry sore throat is one of the most distressing disorders resulting from the habit under discussion. The practice known as "hawking" is a familiar symptom of this trouble. The habit is always a mouth breather, and the unpleasant sound is made in the effort to dislodge the hard, dry and tenacious mucus from the pharynx and posterior wall of the mouth. In all cases where the habit is caused by nasal obstruction, there is a voice disturbance, an imperfect resonance from the air or tone which passes upward into the nasal cavity, but finding no outlet, there, returns and escapes through the mouth, the individual then being said to speak through his nose. The disagreeable habit of snoring is caused, by sleeping with the mouth open. The nose breather never snores.

In children, as might be expected, the effects of mouth breathing, on the general constitution are strongly marked. Dr. Wagner has no doubt that in infancy and early youth, when the bones of the thorax are soft and flexible, the deformity known as "pigeon breast" is brought about by this habit. Children should be sedulously taught to use the mouth for eating and speaking only, and the author recommends that, during sleep, the nose be kept open by the adoption of the practice followed by Indian squaws of closing an infant's mouth by gently pressing the lips together. People of mature age also need to be impressed with the necessity of persistence in the practice of nose breathing. For those who are addicted to keeping the mouth open for breathing during sleep only, it is suggested that compulsory closure may be successfully carried out by means of a linen or leather support for the lower jaw, adjusted to the top of the head.

He Was Going Out.

"I am going out for a short time," said Mr. Breezy, rising from the supper table and turning toward the hall door.

"My dear," said Mrs. Breezy, pushing her chair back and vigorously folding up her napkin, "I wish to go out myself this evening."

"But, dear," said Mr. Breezy, moving slowly toward the door, "I have an engagement that must be attended to. You know how I'm taking a little interest in politics this fall, and I must be at the club without fail at eight o'clock or thereabouts."

"Mr. Breezy, do you know how long it is since you spent an evening at home?" asked Mrs. Breezy, taking a position between her husband and the door.

"But, my dear, you will never understand. This is a most important year for our party, and if I am ever to become a power—"

"Of course, Mr. Breezy, I am not a politician, and I hope I never shall be. It is bad enough to have a husband mixed up with ward rackets and barroom loungers. Mr. Breezy, if you really prefer such company to mine I shall not complain, but it shows extremely bad taste. You profess to be a gentleman, Mr. Breezy. When I married you you were a gentleman, or at least I had every reason for believing so, but if you continue to mix with these politicians I am sure you will end by being as bad as they are. How can you get up and talk nonsense to such a mob as beyond you? So you wish to be a power, Mr. Breezy, you are not a William M. Everts, and you know it. If I thought there was the slightest chance of your ever amounting to anything I might put up with your neglect, but you are humdrum, and you always will be humdrum. I married you because you were humdrum. I hoped I was getting a man who would be satisfied to remain at home after business hours, and not go making a fool of himself in what your recent companions call public affairs. What are public affairs to you, Mr. Breezy, compared to the welfare of your wife and family? Now, you are going out night after night to those miserable clubs and meetings, and what good is it going to do you anyway? Perhaps you think you will be successful, but you won't. You won't run for anything. What do you suppose those political vagabonds want of you, anyway? I'll tell you, Mr. Breezy, they want your money. That is what they are after, and you are just stupid enough to give it to them, too, while I have to turn my last year's dresses and deny myself even the common necessities of life, and the poor children half the time do not look decent enough to attend school. I am sure you profess to work hard enough to get your money without throwing it away on a lot of whisky-drinking loafers. Now, Mr. Breezy, I wish to make a call this evening, and if you are still respectable enough to go among ladies and gentlemen, I should like to have you accompany me."

"My dear," said Mr. Breezy, drawing a longer sigh of relief, "do be a little reasonable."

"A little more reasonable?" said Mrs. Breezy, moving close to the door and closing it. "If I were not the most reasonable woman alive, I should like to know where you would be at this moment. On which side of the family do you suppose, Mr. Breezy, lies the common sense? You wouldn't have a dollar to-day or a root over your head if I hadn't saved you from a thousand blunders and foolish actions. No, Mr. Breezy, it is well that you have a wife who is reasonable and endowed with a grain or two of tact. Why, it was only the other day that you actually wished to bet on a horse-race. You, a respectable married man, with a family to support, betting on horse-races. Mr. Breezy, you are not the man you were when I married you, and if you keep on the way you are going now I shall turn to my mother-in-law. Mr. Breezy, it is just shameful. Go to your horrid club. Ruin yourself, if you like. I'm sure I don't care," and Mrs. Breezy pulled out her handkerchief with a jerk and left the room, slamming the door after her.

"Now for it," said Mr. Breezy, seizing his hat and making for the basement stairs.—Brooklyn Eagle.

RESCUED FROM DEATH.

The following statement of William J. Coughlin, of Somerville, Mass., is so remarkable that we here ask for it the attention of our readers. He says: "In the fall of 1876, I was taken with a violent bleeding of the lungs, followed by a severe cough. I soon began to lose my appetite and flesh. I was so weak at one time that I could not leave my bed, and the sun of 1877 I was admitted to the City Hospital. While there, the doctors said I had a hole in my left lung as big as a half dollar. I expended over a hundred dollars in doctors and medicines. I was so far gone at one time a report went around that I was dead. I gave up hope, but a friend told me of Dr. Wm. Hall's Balsam for the Lungs. I bought at my friend's store, and taking my case was incurable, but I got a bottle to satisfy them, when, to my surprise and gratification, I commenced to feel better. My hope, once dead, began to revive, and to-day I feel in better spirits than I have the past three years.

"I write this hoping you will publish it, so that every afflicted with the Lungs will be induced to take Dr. Wm. Hall's Balsam for the Lungs, and be convinced that CONSUMPTION CAN BE CURED. I have taken two bottles, and can positively say that it has done more good than all the other medicines I have taken since my sickness. My cough has almost entirely disappeared, and I shall soon be able to go to work. Sold by druggists.

ARE THESE MEN

LIARS?

Read what some of them say of Hale's Cough Cordial. These are not bogus testimonials, signed by imaginary people from unheard of towns, but facts well known to you, and you know would not allow their names to be used if it were not a medicine of real merit and just as represented.

REV. M. G. HODGE.

Janesville, Wis.—I have made use of Dr. Hale's Cough Cordial for an affection of the throat, and regard it as an excellent remedy.

Hon. JAMES ROSS,

Grand Lecturer I. O. G. T. of Wisconsin.—From a feeling of gratitude, I take great pleasure in giving this voluntary testimony to the efficacy of Hale's Cough Cordial in easily and pleasantly curing a persistent cough and catarrh.

Dr. C. L. MARTIN,

Janesville, Wis.—Having suffered long from a sore throat, I was prevailed upon to try Dr. Hale's Cough Cordial, and received more benefit from it than any other medicine I ever used.

Hon. FRANK LELAND

Consul to Canada.—I regard it as one of the best Cough medicines ever prepared.

E. O. KIMBERLEY,

Brookfield, Wis.—We have never known of so good a remedy for a cold or cough as Hale's Cough Cordial.

D. R. STOUT,

Janesville, Wis.—I have recovered from the difficulty, and give the whole credit to Hale's Cough Cordial. The world has never produced a sorer remedy for a cough.

GUSTAVUS STONE,

Deloit, Wis.—I have used Hale's Cough Cordial in my family for the past five years, and I consider it one of the most valuable remedies for bronchial, throat and lung difficulties.

E. M. JACKS,

With J. V. Farrell & Co., Chicago.—A friend here in the city had been cured of a worse cough than mine by Hale's Cough Cordial, and insisted on my trying it. I did try it, and less than one bottle cured me perfectly.

J. W. MATHEWS.

Milton, Wis.—I purchased a bottle of Hale's Cough Cordial, and the first dose satisfied me that I had found the right kind of medicine. My cough entirely ceased, my voice is strong again—in fact, I consider myself a well man.

A number of those interested in the Young Men's Christian Association, went to Beloit by train yesterday to attend the closing services of the annual convention. There were services at the college at 9 o'clock, an open air meeting at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, a meeting at the opera house a little later, and an evening service at the First Congregational church. In the election of officers on Saturday last, N. Dearborn, Esq., of this city, was elected President for the coming year, and F. M. Haight, of Appleton, Secretary.

Universal Appropriation. By the community at large has been given to Burdock Blood Bitters. No instance is known where dissatisfaction has been manifested by their use, or where aught but benefit followed their administration. Price $1.00, trial size 10 cents. For sale by A. J. Roberts and Sherer & Co.

THE WEATHER.

REPORTED BY FRANKLIN & EVENSON, DRUGGISTS.

The thermometer at 6 o'clock last night stood at 60 degrees above; at 1 o'clock A. M. to-day at 47 degrees above; at 7 o'clock A. M. at 44 degrees above, and at 1 o'clock P. M. at 55 degrees above. Partly cloudy.

The indications to-day are, for the upper lake region, fair weather, northerly winds, higher barometer, and lower temperature.

Sowing and Reaping.

When a young lady has handkerchiefs for a rich bachelor, she sows that she may reap. When seeds of disease are planted through over-indulgence, you can prevent the undertaker from reaping the benefit by using Serrino Blossom. Price 50 cents, trial bottles 10 cents. Sold by A. J. AMUSEMENT NOTES.

The "Alvin Joslin" company will doubtless have a crowded house to-night, the diagram of reserved seats being pretty well checked off.

Next Friday night Miss Abbie Carrington is to appear at the Orpheus club concert. Her reputation throughout the country, and the popularity she has won by her former appearances here, together with the local reputation of the Orpheus club, will cause a full house.

The entertainment to be given by Mrs. Day and others at Lappin's hall, next Thursday evening, promises to be one which will please greatly, and the programme presents many novel attractions.

The mere announcement that Clara Louise Kellogg is to appear here Wednesday evening, November 2, has awakened a lively interest. She is to appear at Beloit the evening before, and at Madison the evening following. The company with her is composed of leading artists, and their coming will be a great event indeed.

The "Electric Light" company is reported as having gone out, so its promised appearance here is declared off. It was booked for the 16th and 10th of November.

Miss Henrietta Vaders, who has appeared here as leading support several times, and fairly captured our people, has entered into a contract with Charles J. Forbes, who is also well known to our people. Miss Vaders is to "star it," and Forbes is to organize a strong company to support her.

Everybody is looking forward to the 19th inst., with great expectations, as on that date the Robbins and Colvin show is to close its season by an afternoon and evening entertainment here, and then go into winter quarters at Mr. Robbins' farm. The tents should be packed to overflow.

"The Banker's Daughter" has excited so much praise elsewhere that there is great curiosity here to see it. The curiosity is to be gratified on Tuesday evening, Nov. 1.

Strangely enough Janesville has not yet been visited by any "Olive" company, but there is one promised and a good one. The Fay Templeton company is to give it here November 10th.

Rice's Evangeline company is to appear here November 23.

"Sellers' Liver Pills" have been the standard remedy for malaria, liver complaint, constipation
